

EXPOSE THE COMMIE-CORBYN BRIGADE

The appeal to anarchy is an ingredient of Bolshevik revolution in the making. To agitate, to forment unrest, to riot - these activities fascinate certain types which loath any kind of social form because of its discipline. That Bolshevism eventually imposes the severest of all forms, supported by the most merciless discipline, is an ironic circumstance never taken into account by the morons whom it attracts in its initial stages.

Even more or less healthy communities possess large numbers of individuals, themselves disorganised, who willingly give their services in any enterprise which promises, no matter how temporarily, the disorganisation of society, and when communities turn decadent, not only are these numbers multiplied, but disorganisation is actually paraded as an intellectual cult worthy of serious attention.

When people are wrenched from the spiritual landmarks which guided their fathers, when they become confused by lack of any faith or certainty, it is perhaps to be expected that they should exalt their own confusion and call it 'emancipation'.

Misguided fools, maybe, but these people are fully backed by the Commie-Corbyn brigade and should be exposed to the public for the thugs they truly are.
