WWW.NEWBRITISHUNION.CO.UK

Dear comrade,

May I take this opportunity to wish you and your loved ones a very Merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

This is the time to rest and take stock, enjoy time with family and friends as you recharge your batteries.

2024 must see us return to the fray with increasing dedication, motivation and commitment to our cause.

A crisis is coming and more people are at last waking up to that fact. We in the NBU have to be ready to lead with unit leaders in every village, town and city across the United Kingdom.

Look out for our new website which is being revamped by NBU Media We will be holding a general meeting next year I hope to see you there.

Imprisonment Without Charge Or Trial.

Prior to World War II, England had a long tradition of free speech that extended to criticism of government policy during war and to campaigns for peace. William Pitt campaigned against the war with the American colonies;

Charles James Fox (founder of the Liberal party) campaigned against the war with Napoleon; and David Lloyd George (later Liberal prime minister in World War I) campaigned against the Boer War. Henry Hyndman, a leading socialist of the time, also campaigned against the Boer War, denouncing it as a 'Jews' war' run by the 'Jewish international' (Justice, August 1900).

More recently, the leaders and members of the British Labour party strongly opposed the Suez War in 1956.

However, during World War II, Mosley together with some 800 of his leading followers and several hundred others were imprisoned without charge or trial because they were opposed the war. How did that come about?

Preparing for war

On 24 August 1939 (a week before Germany invaded Poland), an Emergency Powers Act was rushed through Parliament. The government was presumably confident that the quarrel between Germany and Poland would escalate into war, particularly after it had given a 'blank cheque' guarantee to an increasingly provocative Polish government. Four days later the first emergency regulations under the new Act were published, including the notorious Regulation 18B. This enabled the Home Secretary to detain any person he believed to be of 'hostile origin or association'.

The position of Mosley and British Union was clear: they opposed the war. When the war started they campaigned for a negotiated peace securing British independence and leaving the British Empire intact. This was something which Hitler offered on many occasions. In the meantime, however, no member would do anything to endanger his country. At the beginning of September 1939, Mosley issued the following message to members of British Union:

“To our members my message is plain and clear. Our country is involved in war. Therefore I ask you to do nothing to injure our country, or to help any other power. Our members should do what the law requires of them, and if they are members of any of the forces or services of the Crown, they should obey their orders, and, in particular, obey the rules of their service.... We have said a hundred times that if the life of Britain were threatened we would fight again.”

Young Blacklists fought with their fellow countrymen on the basis of ‘My Country, Right or Wrong’, even though they considered the war to be unnecessary and against Britain’s interests.

The first British casualty listed in the war was a Blackshirt, Aircraftsman K G Day, who was killed in RAF raid on the second day of the war. Also among the ten crew lost in that raid was Aircraftsman G T Brocking, another Blackshirt. Both Day and Brocking were ground crew who had volunteered to be acting air gunners for the raid. Altogether, over 1,000 of Mosley’s Blackshirts were killed in action during the war.

Mosley, and other members of British Union who were not enlisted in the services, bravely continued their campaign for a negotiated peace, holding many public meetings. The war was opposed on the grounds that no British interest was at stake in Poland and a major war would lead (as it did) to the loss of the British Empire and the rise of Soviet communism in Europe. Only Britain and France intervened in the war. All other countries in Europe were unconcerned, as was the rest of the world. Although the British and French governments claimed to be fighting for Poland, their hypocrisy was soon exposed as war was not declared against the Soviet Union when it invaded Poland two weeks after Germany.

Churchill Takes Over

Winston Churchill became Prime Minister on 10 May 1940, after the downfall of Neville Chamberlain following the Norway debacle (which, ironically, Churchill had instigated). Now the war began going from bad to worse for Britain. The Germans broke through the French lines and allied forces were soon in disarray. A Coalition government was formed with the Labour party and there is evidence that Labour made participation conditional on the imprisonment of Mosley and other people they did not like and could not answer. The author and historian, Hugh Ross Williamson, a Labour Parliamentary candidate at the time recorded, in a letter on 17 July 1942, that:

“At the Bournemouth Conference of the Labour Party in 1940 one of the main subjects of conversation which I heard at ‘unofficial’ talks was whether or not the Labour leaders had made the arrest and imprisonment of Mosley a condition of their entering the Government. The general feeling was that they had (or, at least, that they ought to) and though the matter is, obviously, incapable of proof, it is still accepted by many of us as the real reason for 18B.”

Condition or not, Churchill and other warmongers in his Cabinet clearly thought it was a good idea to silence opposition and generally intimidate the people now that things were going wrong.

The round-up

As it happened, it seems that even 18B, as originally issued, provided insufficient grounds to imprison Mosley and his followers. Two Parliamentary sitting days after Labour joined the government (and four days after the Labour conference), a special amendment, Clause 1A, was rushed through Parliament. The amendment virtually allowed the Home Secretary to jail anyone he liked at his discretion, and the very next day the first arrests, including that of Mosley, took place. Apart from 800 members of British Union, several hundred others were arrested, including Admiral Barry Domville (former Chief of Naval Intelligence) and Captain Ramsay (Conservative MP for Midlothian). Both Domville and Ramsay had formed organisations (not connected to British Union) to campaign for peace.

Among British Union members imprisoned were holders of every medal for valour which could be awarded to British servicemen except the Victoria Cross (one Blackshirt did hold the VC, but even Churchill shrunk from throwing him into jail). Some Blackshirts were arrested while serving in the Local Defence Volunteers and Civil Defence. Some Blackshirt servicemen rescued at Dunkirk were arrested back in England. One Blackshirt, an amateur yachtsman, was arrested immediately after returning from Dunkirk where he had helped to evacuate British troops. Men and women from all walks of life were rounded up. One notable victim was a farmer, Jorian Jenks, who was Prospective British Union candidate for Horsham, a pioneer of the ecology movement in Britain and later a founder of the Soil Association.

Silencing of opponents - the only justification

Not surprisingly it was difficult for the government to justify the mass arrests, particularly as it claimed to be fighting for freedom. A propaganda campaign was instigated about ‘fifth columnists’, clearly aimed at the internees, who were in no position to reply effectively. Yet, just two weeks before the first arrests, when fears of invasion were mounting, Mosley had issued the following message to members of British Union:

“According to the Press, stories concerning the invasion of Britain are being circulated.... In such an event every member of British Union would be at the disposal of the nation. Every one of us would resist the foreign invader with all that is in us. However rotten the existing government, and however much we detested its policies, we would throw ourselves into the effort of a United nation until the foreigner was driven from our soil. In such a situation no doubt exists concerning the attitude of British Union”.

No acts of disloyalty could be proved against any of British Union’s members. They declared themselves in favour of a negotiated peace but that was a far cry from wanting Britain’s defeat.

Mosley succeeded in establishing the real reason for his imprisonment at his hearing before the ‘Advisory Committee’ set up by government to consider appeals against internment. This was a whitewash operation designed to the false impression that there was some justice or legality involved in the mass arrests. In fact all members of the Committee (one of whom, at least, namely Anthony Blunt, was a real traitor) were appointed by the government and they had no power at all. The final decision lay within the complete discretion of the Home Secretary.

Nevertheless, Mosley did get a significant admission from the Committee’s chairman, Mr (later Lord) Justice Birkett. Their exchange of words was subsequently revealed in the House of Commons without challenge from any quarter, then or since, by Mr. R. R. Stokes, MP., who later became a Minister in a Labour Government (Minister of Works 1945/51):

‘After sixteen hours cross-examination in the private committees to consider 18B cases, Mr. Norman Birkett indulged in this conversation with Sir Oswald Mosley, which I think ought to be quoted and put on record, whatever one’s feelings. Sir Oswald Mosley said to Mr. Birkett:

“There appear to be two grounds for detaining us- a suggestion that we are traitors who would take up arms and fight with the Germans if they landed, and that our propaganda undermines the civilian morale.”

Mr. Birkett replied: “Speaking for myself, you can entirely dismiss the first suggestion.”

Sir Oswald Mosley: “Then I can only assume that we have been detained because of our campaign in favour of a negotiated peace.”

Mr. Norman Birkett: “Yes, Sir Oswald, that is the case.”“

[Extract from Hansard , 10 December 1940]

The internees were initially sent to prisons, then to various concentration camps in England and the Isle of Man, where they languished for months and years at the whim of the Home Secretary, separated from family and friends, their lives and careers in tatters. Mosley himself was imprisoned for 3½ years and was only released when struck down with an illness which doctors certified would be fatal if he remained imprisoned.

Many of the internees spent time in the notorious Camp 020 at Ham Common. This was a secret camp not disclosed to the International Red Cross, not surprisingly as it subjected its victims to long periods of solitary confinement and intense psychological torture in order to obtain 'confessions' or information.

The hate campaign against the internees even continued after their release. No apologies have been made or compensation paid. Instead, the authorities imposed further losses where they could. Thus, civil servants, such as Andrew Burns, were deprived of their pensions in respect of the period of their detention.

There seems no doubt, however, that many people involved in the operation of 18B against innocent people were deeply ashamed. This is evidenced by the fact that most public records relating to the detentions have been deliberately destroyed. When the records were released under the Thirty Year Rule, files of only 18 out of some 800 British Union detainees were made available. Initially it was claimed that they had 'gone missing'. Then it was admitted that they had been destroyed as 'of no historical interest'. Thus, it seems that the imprisonment of hundreds of political opponents in concentration camps in Britain, without charge or trial, is not a matter of historical interest to the Establishment.

Someone who was clearly embarrassed by the detentions was Lord Jowitt, who was Lord Chancellor in the Labour Government, 1945/51. In a House of Lords Debate on 11 December 1946 he stated : -

"I am not going to embark on a controversy as to whether Sir Oswald Mosley is an ordinary or extraordinary man, but we all agree that he was a very prominent man, and everybody in this country, and I suppose a very large number of people abroad, know him by name and know the sort of action which he took.

"After all, let us be fair to those people who were imprisoned under Order 18B, and let us remember that they have never been accused of any crime; not only have they not been convicted of a crime but they have not been accused of a crime. That should be remembered in all fairness to them." -

10 POINTS OF FASCISM by Oswald Mosley

Patriotism and Revolution FASCISM is a creed of patriotism and revolution. For the first time a strong movement emerges, which on the one hand is loyal to King and Country, and on the other hand stands for far-reaching and revolutionary changes in government, in economics, and in life itself. Hitherto, patriotism has been associated with those who wish to keep things as they are; revolution has been associated with a flabby internationalism which sets the interests of foreign countries before those of Britain. The watchword of Fascism is "Britain First". We love our country, but we are determined to build a country worthy of that love. Things cannot remain as they are: we must have great changes to adapt modern Britain to modern fact. True patriotism finds expression for the first time in the revolution of Fascism. The first necessity of the day is action. Again and again, the people have voted for programmes of action. Again and again they have been betrayed by the existing parties and frustrated by the present system. Conservatives have tried to keep things as they are, and to maintain what they call the stability of the State. For the purpose of resisting change, they have appealed to loyalty and patriotism. But to resist change in an age when change is necessary, is to threaten the stability and safety of the State, and is the reverse of patriotism. Socialists, on the other hand, have talked of progress, but have sought it in the endless discussions of talkative committees. They have rejected and derided the great instruments of leadership and decision by which alone things can be done and progress can be achieved. So their talk of progress has ended in chaos and in flight from responsibility. Fascism combines progress with the executive instruments of loyalty, decision and voluntary discipline, by which alone things can be done and ordered progress can be secured. The true patriotism of Fascism will carry the changes that are necessary, by principles and by methods which bring change with order and efficiency. The Fascist Organisation FASCISTS bind themselves together to serve their country in a voluntary discipline, because without discipline they realise that nothing can be done. The black shirts which they wear symbolise their determination to save the nation. They are not afraid to stand out from their fellows as men dedicated to the service and revival of their country. The wearing of the black shirt by our more active members break down all barriers of class within our ranks, for all are dressed alike. (The wearing of the Blackshirt is not compulsory.) The salute is the recognition of a brother Fascist who is inspired by the same passionate ideal of national service. Fascism, like every political creed this country has ever known, is common to all great countries, but Fascism is more in keeping with the British character than any other political faith.

For the essence of Fascism is teamwork, the power to pull together and to sink individual interests in the service of the nation. This we claim has been the leading characteristic of the British people at every great moment of our history.

IV Unemployment and the Modern Problem FASCISM believes that the present world trouble of unemployment is the inability of the people to buy and consume the goods which industry produces. Every day rationalisation and scientific development enable industry to produce more goods with less labour. The power to produce increases, but the power to consume does not increase. In addition Britain is faced with a particular problem because she is the greatest exporting nation in the world. Foreign markets are continually closing against us for the simple reason that other nations are determined themselves to produce the goods which they consume.

V The Corporate State Fascism solves the problem of unemployment and poverty by establishing the Corporate State, which will be divided into National corporations governed by representatives of employers, workers and consumers, operating under Fascist government. The State will not attempt to conduct industry as it would under Socialism, instead, the State will lay down the limits within which industry may operate, and those limits will be the national welfare. Private ownership will be permitted and encouraged, provided such activity enriches the nation as well as the individual. All interests that operate against the nation will be rigorously suppressed. The function of the Corporations will be to raise wages and salaries over the whole field of industry as science, rationalisation and industrial technique increase the power to produce. Consumption will be adjusted to production and a Home Market will be provided by the higher purchasing power of our own people.

VI The Export Trade THE export trade will be supported by the Corporate system in the unification of our buying and selling arrangements abroad, which will enable industry to speak with one voice, and government for the first time to support our export trade. Our trade motto will be: "Britain Buys from Those who Buy from Britain" We shall transfer elsewhere our purchases of food stuffs and raw materials if those from whom we buy will not buy from us in return. By these means we will force goods into markets now closed against us until we have built a self contained Empire which makes us independent of foreign markets.

VII Fascist Empire We seek to build a Britain as far as possible self contained, and an Empire completely self-contained. We seek to create a great area of the earth with a far higher standard of civilisation than prevails elsewhere, which is immune from the chaos of struggle and collapse. For this purpose Fascism will exclude foreign goods. Tariffs are useless because they tax the consumer without keeping out foreign goods which are the product of cheap slave labour in foreign countries. Within the empire we can produce all manufactured goods, foodstuffs and raw materials which we require. Modern science enables us to do it in abundance, for we have passed from the economics of poverty to the economics of plenty, and great nations can be self contained once they are organised and scientifically protected from the shocks and dislocations of world chaos. Such organisation will help to preserve the peace of this country and the world, for the prime cause of war is the international struggle for markets and raw materials, supported by international finance. A self-contained Empire will be withdrawn from that struggle, and the risks of war will be diminished. Britons will not fight again except in defence of their own homes and empire. Fascist movements now make rapid progress in all the great Dominions, and are federated with the British Union of Fascists in the New Empire Union.

VIII Agriculture: A Fascist Three Year Plan FASCISM stresses the importance of reviving the great agricultural industry, which has been betrayed by all parties. At present we produce £280,000,000 per annum of our total food supplies into this country', and we import £220,000,000 worth from foreign countries, and £140,000,000 worth from the Dominions. Under a three year plan. Fascism will nearly double the production of British agriculture by the total exclusion of foreign goods. We can raise home production to £500,000,000 a year, and yet give the Dominions under Fascist government a better market than, they enjoy today. The prices of farming produce must be fixed in advance, and the profiteering middleman ruthlessly suppressed. The higher purchasing power of the industrial worker under Fascism will afford the farmer an economic price for his product and a living wage for his workers. The higher purchasing power of the farming population, when agricultural production is increased, will take the place of our vanishing foreign markets, in buying many of the products of our present export trade. The countryside shall be restored to prosperity, and shall contribute a healthy, virile manhood to build the Greater Britain of *• ? the future.

IX Aliens & International Finance FASCISM alone will deal with the alien menace, because Fascism alone puts "Britain First." Under Fascism, no alien shall enter this country to take the jobs of Britons, and aliens already here who have abused the hospitality of this nation will be sent back to whence they came. Fascism will deal, not only with the poor aliens who are here seeking jobs; Fascism will deal also with the great alien financiers of the City of London who use the financial power of Britain in the interests, not of this country, but of foreign countries. These men are the real alien menace, for by their foreign investments they are using British money to finance our competitors against us all over the world. The interest on the loans they have made to foreign countries come back to them in the shape of cheap goods which undercut our standard of life and deprive our people of employment Fascism alone will deal faithfully with the alien menace, in whatever quarter it rears its head.

X Leadership-Parliament-Liberty FASCISM is the leadership of the nation. It is not dictatorship in the old sense of the word, which implies government against the will of the people. It is dictatorship in the modern sense of that word, which implies government aimed by the people with complete power of action to overcome problems which must be solved if the nation is to live. We seek to achieve our aims by peaceful, legal and constitutional means with the willing consent of the nation declared at a General Election. Fascist Government, however, will at once take power to act by securing from the first Fascist Parliament complete power of action for the Government. Without the power to act and the will to act, nothing can be done. Fascist Government, will use the power given it by the first Fascist Parliament for the reconstruction of the nation. At the end of the first Fascist Parliament, another election will be held, on an occupational and not on a geographical franchise. Men and women will vote within their own industries with a real knowledge of the persons and subjects with which they are dealing. Women who are not in industry will vote as wives and mothers, and will thus be represented for the first time by people competent to speak for the great national interest which they represent. Women will not be compelled to retire from industry, but the high wages of their husbands under the Corporate system will make it possible for them to retire if they wish, and the present competition between men and women in industry will thus be ended. In the new Parliament, every interest and aspect of national life will be represented, but every interest will be subordinate to the welfare of the nation as a whole. Thus a technical and not a political Parliament will be elected to assist Government in the problems of a technical age. Thereafter, the policy and personnel of the Government as a whole will be submitted direct to the people to judge by vote. Government will no longer depend on the intrigues and manoeuvres of conflicting parties, but on the will of the nation directly expressed. Thus the people will retain full liberty to approve or reject the policy of the Government, but a Government so approved and supported will have power to act and to end economic chaos. Fascism declares that the real liberty is economic liberty, and this cannot come until the end of economic chaos. Government cannot end economic chaos without power to act, and that power to act can only come from Fascism. Good wages, short hours, good houses, opportunities for culture and recreation are the real liberty. The mass of the people are being robbed of that real liberty today by the false liberty of a few old men to talk for ever in the present Parliamentary system. Talk and action do not go together, and action is the necessity of today. We will end talk with a new system, in which the whole resources of the nation are mobilised for action. The Blackshirts of Fascism, by their struggle and sacrifice, offer the nation a new leadership and a new road to national salvation. We ask you to follow that lead through the ending of class war, reaction and chaos, to the building of a Britain worthy of our pride and of our love.

New British Union office needs your help

As members will know, the New British Union has been under constant attack since first forming in 2012. Our opponents will not stop. Nor must we.

To date they have succeeded in getting the party's PayPal account closed, the new donorbox account, Facebook page, YouTube channel all shutdown, and banks presently refuse to do business with us. This has interfered with the running of the New British Union; and especially interfered with the office rental itself.

However, and despite this, on a day-to-day basis the office continues to remain a great success. It has allowed us to increase New British Union membership and literature. The office has also allowed the New British Union to store and secure far more valuable resources and property: such as computers, printers, banners, flags and posters.

To this end then the New British Union would ask its members and supporters to consider setting up a monthly debit of £10.00.

Sort code 09-01-29

This to secure the rent for the office so that, together, we might carry on the struggle and fight.

The Patriotic Spectrum

NNATION REVISITED

The UK has a host of far-right parties ranging from the Traditional Britain Group which is conservative, to British Movement which is openly National Socialist, and from the British Democratic Party which believes in parliamentary democracy, to the New British Union which is unashamedly neo-fascist.

They are all opposed to the European Union; even the League of St George, which sprang from Union Movement, follows the insular nationalism of the Daily Mail. Their position is based on the dream of an Imperial Federation, an idea that was proposed but never fully adopted at the Imperial Conference in London in 1937.

As the wartime generation dies out the percentages for 'Leave' and 'Remain' will reverse and a majority will want to re-join the EU. Economic nationalism makes no sense in a country that imports half of its fuel and food. The diehard Brexiteers are stuck in their ways, but as our economy shrinks, they will have to adopt a more realistic policy toward Europe.

The solidarity of the patriotic press has been upset by the wars in Ukraine and Palestine. Heritage and Destiny is solidly pro-Ukrainian, but Candour favours a negotiated peace with Russia.

The invasion of Gaza is another bone of contention. National Socialist Outlook states: "BM does not support Israel under any circumstances and is also totally opposed to Hamas and all forms of jihadist and militant Islamism."

On the other hand the Springbok Club Newsletter ends its editorial in defence of Israel with the words: "Victory to the IDF!"

Another great issue is repatriation. When it was proposed by Union Movement in the 1950s there were only a quarter of a million non-whites in the UK. And when 'Spearhead' published an article entitled 'Repatriation; How it Can be Done', in 1969, there were still only two million, but now there are more than ten million. The fact is that we lack the ships, the planes, the manpower, the money, the military clout, and the will, to mount such an operation.

Nick Griffin may have been a crook and a charlatan but he recognised demographic reality when John Tyndall was still living in a world of fantasy. We should certainly deport alien criminals and illegal immigrants, but John Tyndall's dream of mass deportation is out of the question.

My old mate John Bean used to say that politics is the art of the possible. He was right and I urge the whole patriotic spectrum to heed his words and drop outdated and unworkable policies. When the unnecessary war in Ukraine is over it's likely that America will withdraw from Europe and force a total rethink of the NATO concept. Then, the UK can reach a realistic political, economic, and military accommodation with the EU and the Russian Federation.

Mass migration can only be controlled by co-operation between the rich countries of the north and the poor countries of the south. It will not be solved by cramming asylum seekers onto barges, or flying them to Rwanda. Modern technology and artificial intelligence are changing the world beyond recognition. We are near to harnessing nuclear fusion to provide unlimited cheap energy. Problems that are insurmountable today will be solved and obsolete systems will be updated, but first we must face reality and stop believing in unicorns.

There is a revolution going on away from cyber-space and street demos; a revolution that will aid the building of nationalist strongholds. Good people are working out of the spotlight - not for any personal glory - but for the benefit of the whole movement. To find out what 'Operation Citadel' involves all you have to do is join the struggle and play your part.

Britain is already, except for one or two city-states, the most densely populated country in the world. One might well think that only a lunatic - and a criminal lunatic, at that - would propose a doubling of the population, bringing with it inevitably further depredation to our diminishing countryside and natural habitats, more overcrowding, more congestion, more motorways and housing estates, more pollution and more spoliation of a once green and pleasant land. Yet this is exactly what the political elite have planned.

The Office for National Statistics announced that well before the end of this century, this small, overcrowded island will undergo a doubling of the population. Furthermore, since the native population of Great Britain is actually in demographic decline, as a result of low native birth-rates and high native emigration, all of this additional population will be due to foreign immigration. The native population of Britain will become a minority in its own land by the end of this century. This is a matter of certainty, not speculation.

Make no mistake: the Britain we love and cherish is vanishing. It is being intentionally destroyed. If the political elite get their way, both British society and the British spirit are doomed to extinction. A British child born at the start of the 21st century is likely to enter their years of retirement as a member of the British ethnic minority. The question is: what are you going to do about it?

GARY RAIKES

THE ISLAMISATION OF EUROPE

Recent population studies have concluded that by 2050, muslims will outnumber western whites in almost every country in Europe.

Islam is a religion/state order that rose in the Dark Ages and continues to remain in the, at least, mediaeval period.

The idea of state sanctioned pedophilia to be introduced into Europe is so offensive as to require action. I cite Surat 65 verse 4 of the Quran where islamist men are allowed to marry underage girls as young as 3 or 4 and have sex with them. Mohammed married a 6 year old girl and had sex with her at the age of 9 when he was 51. Her name was Aisha.

Do you want your white daughter to be violated at such a young age?

Then we come to the Quran Surat 33, verse 21 where Mohammed is shown to be the model "beautiful pattern of conduct" for every muslim man to follow.

Do I need to say more?

Also the Quran allows every muslim to lie to any infidel and kill him, then take his wife as a sex slave.

Belgium now has an Islam Party that proposes to bring Sharia law to the country. Sharia law allows for head and appendage amputations, stoning of unfaithful wives and many more brutal mediaeval practices.

France has so many muslims that they block streets when they go to prayers in the street. Which is illegal in Paris and elsewhere.

In the Nordic countries, the muslims that have come in - usually not well educated and poor, have sapped the economies of these countries by contributing nothing to productivity and using up vast amounts of public resources. That has changed the economies of Scandinavia to roll into higher taxes to pay for these incoming foreigners.

Muslims also tend to congregate in ghettos where they do not meet or interact with original white citizens so that they do not integrate into the new community.

Why do they prefer to come to the West rather than any one of the 51 muslim countries in the world. Because most muslim countries are poor and mired in the stupidity of the Quran. So why not Saudi Arabia, the UAE, or other of the rich muslim countries - because there is the potential of war.

Every country in Scandinavia, including Denmark, as well as the Netherlands, Poland, are all having hard line political parties coming to power with the idea of sending the muslims back to their home countries especially if they are illegal immigrants but also if they go for holidays to their home country or have committed criminal offences.

In short, if we do not exclude these muslims from the West, we can expect a severe change in our social structure and laws, and SOON.

Canada and the USA are also at risk - Canada because we have a Prime Minister that is under the thrall of the World Economic Forum and in the USA, President Biden doesn't care how many immigrants come into his country whether they are illegal or applying for citizenship or applying for asylum.
